The Unequal Impact of COVID-19 on Households' Financial Stability

Financial Capability Savings Racial Wealth Equity Scorecard Data & Research

While the scale of the impact of the pandemic will remain unknown for some time, one thing is certain: this public health crisis will directly, or indirectly, affect every individual across the globe. Although everyone is vulnerable to contracting the virus, the risk of developing severe or lethal illness is not equally distributed across the population. The elderly and those with certain preexisting health conditions are especially vulnerable. Similarly, the negative impact that this crisis will have on the finances of families and individuals will disproportionately hurt those who are already economically vulnerable. Read about who is more likely to get hurt financially.
